Visit to Rodmarton Long Barrow on 17th October 2026

Visit Report

Introduction

This was our sixth outing this year, and 6 of us managed to meet up. Although the day started bright and sunny it started to cloud over in the afternoon. As we approached the long barrow permissions to enter the site were requested and a few words offered to the guardians.

When we reached the long barrow itself there was a cold north wind blowing, and as a result, after an hour or so most of us were feeling quite chilled. Unfortunately, this was not conducive to conducting detailed investigations, and although enjoying the site overall, it was decided to cut short our visit due to the cold.

The following report summarises the main findings of the group.

Findings and Comments

At the False Entrance at the Eastern End of the Long barrow

- Between the two slabs of stone, a node with energy spiralling clockwise into the ground. Cosmic connection to Vega. Also, water detected flowing along the spine of the barrow. Four energy lines crossing at the node aligning with cardinal points.

Along the Spine of the Long Barrow from East to West

- Along the axis of the barrow at regular intervals a further four nodes identified located above a water course. At each node, clockwise energy into the ground, with each having a cosmic connection to Vega. The ground was uneven on the barrow itself, so it was difficult to map out the energy lines crossing at the nodes. However, walking around the barrow had shown energy lines emanating at regular intervals which would suggest a similar arrangement to the node at the false entrance, but this needs to be verified.

The Role of the Trees

- There were several grand beech trees at the periphery of the site and one oak. They were dowsed to be approximately 260 years old and had been planted at about the same time. It was sensed that this was to give protection to the site. One of the beech trees when dowsed was found to be a “Beacon” tree.

- The Beacon tree was impressive; I approached cautiously and was aware of a kind of 'charge'. I moved around the tree and suddenly felt a sharp pain in my lower left side, felt nauseous and moved away very quickly!
- A group of us visited one of the beech trees at the eastern end of the barrow and as an exercise dowsed and measured the tree's aura. The tree was then given hugs and love, and it was interesting to measure the extent to which the tree's aura had increased.
- The very large old Beech at the end of the Barrow was a true Matriarch, which it was felt, needed some healing.
- Overall, it was sensed from the trees that the site needed healing and a group of us got together to bring in healing to the best of our ability. Certainly, a shift in energy was felt afterwards.
- Also following the healing one person reported something akin to snowflakes or white petals softly falling around us and the tree. Gradually these coalesced into a circling white light which slowly dissolved into the air.
- Another person reported that two people had felt a sense of calm in the middle of the group carrying out the healing. Even the air felt calm within it, which was in contrast to the windiness about.

Other Comments

- The presence was sensed of the Cucullati, the three small protectors associated with a local earth cult or Cuda.
- A beautiful Barrow with calm and peaceful presence despite the brisk wind.
- A calm and peaceful presence with a clear empty quietude, somewhat different from that of the Uley Long Barrow which was a deep peace and somehow nurturing.

Conclusions

It was unfortunate that the weather was not conducive to spending time recording more detailed information about the site. Enough information was gleaned however to suggest that this was an important site in neolithic times and would certainly be on a list of sites to revisit at some time in the future.

Postscript

Before visiting a site, I always measure its energy in Bovis units. Prior to our visit I obtained a reading of 8K units (the energy of a person in fair health). After our visit I obtained a reading of 29K units (Star Sirius). Again, this level of energy seems to be achieved where we have a group of like-minded people all with a positive intent coming together. As before though this information needs to be corroborated.
